

Greenbelt Station South Core Site Now Closer to Development Start

by Thomas X. White

Representatives of NVR/Ryan Homes and the Woodlawn Development Group met with the Greenbelt City Council on August 28 and provided a brief update on progress underway at their South Core site. Based on the report, Greenbelt residents will start to see increased activity soon after Labor Day at the site just off Greenbelt Road. Attorney Norman Rivera represented NVR/Ryan Homes and Will Yokel of the Woodlawn Development Group represented the construction group preparing the site for development.

All members of council were in attendance as well as City Manager Michael McLaughlin and Director of Planning and Community Development Celia Craze.

The first activity at the site will be the placement of a sales trailer near the entry just off Greenbelt Road.

The road access then will be improved with guard rails leading to the sales site. The two water retention ponds also will be finished and landscaped and a marketing billboard erected at the entrance.

Initial marketing will focus on the townhome portion of the development, mainly east of the proposed connector road to the Metro Station. The marketing of these townhomes will be followed by construction of model homes in about four months.

Owners of the site have said they are in negotiations with a potential partner for development of apartments at a site to the west of the connector road. In addition they have filed a request with the county that would reduce the amount of retail that had been approved, also on the west side of the connector road. Based on an agreement with the city, if the retail is reduced, part of the area will revert to parkland on the west side.

Members of council were generally pleased to receive the report that further site development and sales activity finally will be taking place at the South Core. Nearly seven years have elapsed since development for the site was first approved.

Councilmembers comments for the developers were supportive. They dealt mainly with ideas to help sales efforts by ensuring that potential buyers were made aware that the project is within the city and that full city services would be available to new residents.

NVR representatives were urged to make contact with the city and the Greenbelt Museum as sources of information regarding the historic character of Greenbelt and its range of services. Councilmember Leta Mach suggested the placement of ads in the local newspaper as part of their marketing efforts.

Greenbelt Theater’s Renovation Not Yet Ready for Prime Time

by Thomas X. White

With a nearly full house in the Greenbelt Community Center Multi-Purpose Room, council held a worksession on August 28 to consider staff recommendations related to the long-awaited renovation of the Old Greenbelt Theatre in Roosevelt Center. All seven councilmembers were present along with City Manager Michael McLaughlin, Director of Planning and Community Development Celia Craze and David Konapelsky from GTM architects.

Although invited to attend, Mike Adams of the contracting firm Gardner and Gardner – the firm likely to accomplish the proposed theater renovation – was not present. Adams’ absence turned out to be a critical issue later in the meeting when council weighed which aspects of the project could be best delayed, based upon the currently limited funding available for the project.

Worksession objectives were outlined in a four-page memorandum prepared by Craze. It was hoped council could address the prioritization of renovation projects to fit the somewhat limited funding available. In her memorandum to McLaughlin, Craze noted, “Even at a price of $1,500,000 for the entire project (including digital projection equipment), this price exceeds the estimated $875,000 included in the 2001 Bond Fund.” Even with those estimates, some work has not been included, mainly improvements to the auditorium, such as removal of the acoustic fabric on the walls and replacement with acoustic tiles; removal of all seats for cleaning, repair and repainting of the auditorium floor; cleaning of the stage curtain; replacement of the wall sconces and painting of the auditorium.

Based on comments and suggestions by speakers at the worksession, captioning technology for people with hearing loss was requested, as well as attention to applicable technology for people with vision loss. Such technology may be associated with the selection of digital projection equipment and those costs were not discussed.

The scheduling of the worksession provided an opportunity for council to hear from interested residents and to provide staff with their priority items so that staff could prepare a proposed Resolution of Negotiated Purchase to present at the next council meeting with adoption at the following meeting.

Such a schedule would allow for initiation of the renovation project late this year, following the Utopia Film Festival. As it turned out council was not in a

Eric Zhang Is Greenbelt’s 2013 Outstanding Citizen

by Marat Moore

Eric Zhang and his family moved to Greenbelt three years ago but he has made such a lasting contribution to the city in that short time that he was named Greenbelt’s Outstanding Citizen for 2013 during opening ceremonies for the Labor Day Festival. The annual presentation, sponsored by the Greenbelt Rotary Club, is Greenbelt’s main civic event of the year and recognizes exemplary volunteer service.

Zhang, 40, documented the life of the city through photographs and narratives for a full year – Greenbelt’s 75th anniversary year of 2012. His goal: to align his work with the tradition of the now-famous New Deal photographers of the Farm Security Administration (FSA). But he used a new format – an online blog (greenbelt2012.wordpress.com).

As stated on the blog, he wanted to “produce a photographic record of Greenbelt in 2012 as the FSA photographers such as Arthur Rothstein and Marjory Collins did during the early years of the town’s history.” Zhang continued, “I am interested in seeing how this New Deal experiment worked out 75 years later.”

The project took months of research and planning before he created his first in-depth posting on January 1, 2012. Each post included multiple photographs and narratives. By his last entry at midnight on December 31, his blog included 9,000 images and showcased nearly 300 in-depth portraits of organizations, people, history, day-to-day life and special events. The result is the most comprehensive documentation of a year in the life of Greenbelt.

Dog Park, City's Best-kept Secret

One of the best-kept secrets regarding the services that Greenbelt provides for its residents is the dog park located on Hanover Parkway. For many Greenbelters, space for their canine companion is unavailable due to living in a condo or townhouse. We cherish not only the fields for the dogs to exercise but the sense of community that has developed within the dog park as well, for owners and pups alike.

It is the residents using the dog park that maintain the culture of the dog park; promoting the rules of the park, maintaining it by routinely cleaning the grounds, providing water for the dogs and even going so far as to leave toys for all dogs to enjoy. I would like to kindly suggest that the city invest more attention to park maintenance as an investment in responsible dog ownership. While the city has installed a sanitation station (where bags are provided near the trash cans), the supply has not been replenished as long as I have been frequenting the park. This action would drastically cut down on the amount of waste that is not cleaned up. If the city lacks manpower, the park could certainly find volunteers to pick up and install the materials.

Also the park is in dire need of a spigot or water pump. With the park's proximity to multiple condo complexes, shopping centers and swimming pools, I cannot imagine this would be a difficult task and it would be very much appreciated, especially in the summer months.

Marching Achievement

What a pleasure it was to read of Lois Rosado's re-dedication of her passion for civil rights. To have been on the mall on August 28, 1963, as a teenager to hear Dr. King's thrilling oratory and then to stand there again 50 years later . . . What an extraordinary achievement!

A Thrilled Winner's Thank You

As the thrilled winner of the raffle basket full of restaurant gift certificates from the Greenbelt Homes booth at the Labor Day Festival, I would like to thank GHI and the many participating merchants. I also want to encourage everyone not to overlook the annual GHI raffle at next year's Festival.

I bought six tickets for $5 and the return on my money appears to be $450. Such a deal! Equally exciting was having Barbara Havecost, Sylvia Lewis and Marat Moore pull up at my door with the basket – just like the Publishers Clearinghouse Prize Patrol!

Lunch, anyone?

Family's Apology

We regret that a misinformed obituary appeared in last week's News Review.

Our father was medically diagnosed with dementia in 2003. He was one to spin life stories and he loved an audience. The more captivated the audience the bigger the tale. As our mother would say, “Who's around to dispute it?” Well, we are. He reeled in quite a few people late in life and was very believable especially when he got weepy. We have submitted a corrected obituary on behalf of his family that we and his lifelong friends will know to be true.

We offer a heartfelt apology to our service men and women who may have been offended. He served his country honorably both in and out of service and was a hero in his own way.

Bravo on Outstanding Selection of Zhang

I'd like to commend the 2013 Outstanding Citizen Committee for its unconventional yet wonderfully spot-on selection of Eric Zhang as Outstanding Citizen.

For anyone still unsure who this guy is, I'd urge a visit to his 2012 photo blog documenting Greenbelt's 75th Anniversary Year at greenbelt2012.wordpress.com. There just isn't a more comprehensive, generous or unbiased portrait of modern Greenbelt. His lens is Greenbelt's unassuming mirror.

Sketch Forest Sights With Marci Nadler

The celebration of the 10th anniversary of the establishment of the Greenbelt Forest Preserve continues on Saturday, September 7 from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. with a session on sketching nature with Marci Nadler, an award-winning artist who lives and works in the Blue Ridge Mountains piedmont area. Those of all levels are welcome to join this free drawing experience.

Nadler says she is inspired by the constantly changing landscape of the Virginia countryside. The session will encourage learning to see the environment in a different way by focusing on minute details – a leaf pattern, insect or fungi – or on a broader subject, such as a landscape view. Nadler will guide participants as they sketch their own visions.

Participants will meet behind Mowatt Church at 40 Ridge Road and should bring a sketching pad, pencils (colored or not) and other materials of their choice. Some hiking may be involved, so be prepared to carry materials. Dress for possible mud, ticks and poison ivy (wear long pants and long sleeves). Bring water. For more information email Susan Barnett at greenbelt-forestpreserve@gmail.com or call 301-474-7465.

GIVES Schedules Quarterly Meeting

Obituaries

Miles C. Doan

Former Lakecrest Drive resident Miles C. Doan died at Charlotte Hall Veterans Home on August 14, 2013.

Mr. Doan and his wife Louraine moved to Greenbelt in 2000 and they enjoyed their time here.

Mr. Doan was born to T. Harvey Doane II and Marion Miles Doane on June 1, 1923 in Berwick, Pa. He was the youngest of five children.

Before enlisting in the army Mr. Doan left school and had not held a job at that time. His mother falsified his work record and date of birth for him to enlist underage and signed him up. He trained at Fort Livingston in Louisiana not Indiantown Gap in Pennsylvania. During his army enlistment he served as a cook and a truck driver for the cleanup crew, both important jobs. He didn't participate in the Omaha Beach D Day invasion or the Battle of the Bulge as he liked to claim. For his service he received a Purple Heart for an injury sustained in France, an American Defense Service Medal and a European African Middle Eastern Service Medal (but no Bronze or Silver Stars). He received a commemorative French pin (but not the French Croix de Guerre) along with everyone else who attended a WWII reunion in Philadelphia. He enlisted as a private and was honorably discharged as a private.

After the war he worked at Weis grocery store in Berwick and then as a roofer in Pennsylvania, Kansas and Maryland. Later, he worked for the General Services Administration as a general carpenter in Washington, D.C., until his retirement. (He did not work for the State Department or the White House).

Mr. Doan was a member of the American Legion Post 19 in Washington, D.C., for several years before transferring membership to Post 136 in Greenbelt. He frequented the Greenbelt Post regularly and enjoyed his time there.

He was preceded in death by his wife of 55 years Lorraine Palmatier Doan and a brother T. Harvey Doan, III.

He is survived by daughters Priscilla Mizani of Greenbelt and Tessa Ptak of Anderson, S.C.; sisters Janet Helwig of Millersburg, Pa. and Sara Van Houten of Tampa, Fla.; a brother Robert Doan of Sun City, Fla., two grandchildren and four great grandchildren.

priority-setting mood and with the absence of the contractor they were not in a position in any case to move the project forward.

Council Comments

Councilmember Konrad Herling wondered if the renovation project would require closing the theater for six months and if it were possible to reduce that closing period. Craze indicated that the staff recommendation was for a minimum of six months.

She said that keeping the theater open during the renovation would add costs to the project and that there would likely be safety or health issues if patrons of the theater had to walk through reconstruction areas. She also indicated that the contractor the city selects would hold the permit and would control work progress.

Herling also suggested that the city (if they have not already done so) might contact and learn from the experience of other theaters that have undertaken or are contemplating renovation.

He mentioned theaters such as the Easton, the Senator Theater in Baltimore and the Avalon in Washington, D.C. Herling also wondered if another bond issue was feasible to raise the additional funding needed to complete the renovation.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts questioned why there was a need to bring the theater up to code if we were not renovating the actual building. He saw the projects as improvements. Craze said the need to upgrade the power supply and distribution for the theater would have to meet code.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts expressed the view that the renovation should have started at the time the city purchased the theater. He also complained there was not enough detail for the projected estimates for various upgrades, especially the lack of detail regarding the projected estimates of nearly $135,000 for the projection room. This was one of the items that upset councilmembers because the contractor was not present to respond to their questions.

Councilmember Emmett Jordan urged council to find a way to move ahead. He wondered if some costs of the power upgrade could be shared with the owner of the building.

Around 9 p.m. Davis indicated she thought another worksession would be needed. She said it would not be likely that a decision could be made in September.

Councilmember Leta Mach continued to urge moving forward. She suggested the city manager might be able to identify additional sources of funding.

McLaughlin agreed that might be possible when the Fiscal Year 2013 budget results are known but he cautioned that any change would have to rely on final information on FY13 property tax levels. Mach offered her estimate of available funding at $985,000.

Councilmember Edward Putens wanted a reason why the contractor was not present.

Citizen Input

Aaron Marcavitch, director of the Anacostia Heritage Trail Area, expressed the view that the historic Greenbelt Theater was a major attraction in the area and suggested fundraising to help with renovation costs. He also thought he could help with some ideas regarding restoring or replacing the doors. His caution, however, was that fundraising by the public would require that specific items be something the public would relate to.

Michael Hartwick pressed council on addressing the accessibility of a renovated theater by people with disabilities. He said that did not just mean the bathrooms. He expressed support for the efforts of the Ad Hoc Group on Captioning.

Barbara Simon, representing the Greenbelt Development Corporation (GDC), indicated they were focusing on the conversion from 35MM projection to digital projection. The GDC indicated that 35MM film distribution may no longer be available for theaters after January 2014.

Justin Baker reiterated the suggestion that the city initiate discussions with other historic theaters, such as the Weinberg and the Senator Theaters in Baltimore, regarding sources of funding.

Marcia Voigt, who has experience in project management, expressed the view that the city staff could have better presented cost estimates and priorities so that council could have addressed them.

Frank Gervasi questioned the replacement of the heating, ventilation and air conditioning system. He suggested that the unit only need to be repaired. He also joined in the suggestion that the theater not be shut down during renovation. Gervasi also wondered about the need for repairs with the brick work in the front of the theater and Craze noted that work is included in the project as funded.

Others spoke in favor of including the captioning function in the upgrade and that it be factored into the proposed projection room costs. Other questions addressed ADA accessibility for the projection room, although feelings were mixed regarding that need. Other attendees said that digital projection capability should be included in the basic projection ($875,000).

Davis noted the short time window to move ahead. She requested that staff set up further meetings and try to move the project as quickly as possible.

New Parents Tips

There are a few ways new parents can reduce a baby's carbon footprint. For starters, opt for a reusable diaper. Parents who ditch the Pampers and go with cloth diapers remove themselves from a 3.6 billion dollar market, according to a 1990 study. To stay green, wash diapers with other laundry in high-efficiency appliances and line dry them. Because bulk is usually even greener, consider a diaper laundry service.

Letters to the Editor

Thank You, Greenbelt!

Two weeks ago, Barbara Havekost from the Labor Day Festival Committee asked me whether I would be willing to take some photos of the Festival. Sure, I replied. I was going to be at the Festival anyway and would be happy to do it. You can imagine my surprise when I was called up to the stage and presented with the Outstanding Citizen award. It was a big honor of course. It was especially unexpected when it was given to someone who did not know about Greenbelt four years ago and has only lived here for three. This weekend, after the parade, I thought about the fortuitous circumstances that led me to Greenbelt and this award.

I came to Washington after finishing graduate school and lived in various rental places in the region including Arlington, Georgetown, Rockville, Silver Spring and Bethesda. Being an avid photographer I got interested in photographing parades and festivals and spent much of my free time taking pictures at various area events. In June 2009, I went to Watkins Regional Park in Upper Marlboro to photograph a Juneteenth event, an African-American celebration of Emancipation. There I met two nice ladies at a booth representing a housing cooperative called Greenbelt Homes, Inc. They told me many good things about the place and gave me a number of helpful brochures. That was my first introduction to Greenbelt. It was much later when I learned their names – Barbara Havekost and Cynthia Newcomer.

In May 2010 I came to Greenbelt for the first time, this time to photograph the Green Man Festival. It was a fun event with many quirky characters dressed in green leaves. As the Festival wound down, I saw my first movie in the Greenbelt Theater (“Avatar”) and then walked across Roosevelt Center and had my first meal in the New Deal Café (served by Karim) while listening to a band called Hot Club of D.C. I still remember the singer singing “La Vie en Rose” that night. A few months later I returned to Greenbelt to photograph the Labor Day parade and this time my wife and son joined me. In November of that year, we purchased our first house – a GHI block townhouse on Ridge Road.

Shortly after we moved in I checked out from the Greenbelt Library a copy of “Greenbelt: History of a New Town 1937-1987” edited by Mary Lou Williamson. In that book I saw many of the New Deal era photographs of Greenbelt for the first time and learned more about the Farm Security Administration photography project. Being interested in documentary photography, I thought it might be interesting to do a photo project on Greenbelt some day in the fashion of the FSA photographs. Then in late 2011, I saw flyers from the Greenbelt 75th Anniversary Committee announcing a year-long series of events to celebrate the city’s 75th anniversary in 2012. I knew immediately that this should be the year to document Greenbelt.

During the year when I

worked on the project, I met many people, from the pioneers who came here in 1937 and 1938, to Outstanding Citizens from previous years and to many, many others who volunteer their time in organizations around the city. Greenbelt is great because of its unique history and its masterful design but more importantly I feel that Greenbelt is great because its people work hard to make it a wonderful place to live. Without the volunteer work of those nice ladies of the GHI Marketing Committee, those behind the Green Man Festival, the New Deal Café, the Labor Day Festival, the News Review and the 75th Anniversary Committee, I probably would not have known Greenbelt, would not have moved here or would not have been able to complete this documentary project last year. Thank you for your recognition. And thank you, Greenbelt volunteers, for making Greenbelt great.

Audubon Bird Program Held in College Park

On Tuesday, September 10 at 7 p.m. Dave Curson will give a free talk at the College Park Airport Annex about the future for Maryland's salt marsh birds as part of the Audubon Salt Marsh Conservation Initiative. The program is sponsored by the Prince George's Audubon Society and the Patuxent Bird Club, a Chapter of the Maryland Ornithological Society.

Maryland, home to some of the largest tidal marshes in the northeastern U.S., has an impressive variety of bird species, including the Saltmarsh Sparrow and Black Rail that only live in this ecosystem. Their future is uncertain due to sea level rise caused in part by climate change that threatens to drown many salt marshes over the coming century, leading the National Audubon Society to launch its salt marsh conservation initiative, part of the Audubon Atlantic Flyway strategy. Curson, Audubon's Maryland Director of Bird Conservation, will update the story, explaining how Audubon is using science and partnerships to fight for Maryland's salt marsh birds.

For more information call 301-262-5148 or visit www.pgaudubon.org. The College Park Airport Annex is at 1985 Cpl. Frank Scott Drive.

Committee, took the stage backed by a host of dignitaries, he built excitement in the crowd, as he usually does, by dropping clues about the identity of the 41st Outstanding Citizen – and hinted that the surprise this year might be bigger than usual.

As he moved into the final segment of the speech, Zugby tried to make eye contact with Zhang – impossible since he was looking at Zugby through the viewfinder of his Nikon D700.

Zugby asked the crowd, “Who is it? Let’s try to guess.”

“It must be someone everyone knows – a jolly greeter, bringer of cheer and goodwill, a public ambassador, right?”

He paused. “Well, it can be, and it has been, but it isn’t.”

“It must be,” Zugby continued, “someone who’s presided over a number of organizations” or “who has been an essential part of Greenbelt for 20 or more years, right?”

Pause. “Well, it can be, and it has been, but it isn’t.”

Zhang, his face still hidden, clicked away and didn’t notice that Zugby was directing the message to him.

“Or someone,” Zugby went on, “whose pictures are all over the media, right?”

Some people in the crowd began to nod and smile. Zhang appeared clueless.

“The pictures,” Zugby said, “are of us – at the Festival, the Community Center, the Municipal Building, Greenbelt East, Greenbelt West – everywhere we have been.”

Zhang kept clicking.

Zhang paused, lowered his camera and looked around, appearing puzzled. He took a few more pictures and then Zugby announced his name. The crowd cheered as Zhang mounted the stage and was joined by his wife Grace Han, expecting their third child, and Andrew, 4-1/2 and Angela, 3.

In a role reversal, Zhang moved from behind the camera to center stage as other photographers focused their lenses on him. He reluctantly surrendered his Nikon to one of them.

Dignitaries on stage included the full Greenbelt City Council; President-Elect Mark Fuerst of the Greenbelt Rotary Club, the primary sponsor of the Outstanding Citizen award; Prince George’s County Councilmembers Ingrid Turner and Mary Lehman; Maryland House of Delegates members Tawanna Gaines, Anne Healey and Alonzo Washington; County Board of Education member Peggy Higgins and Master of Ceremonies Suzanne Plogman.

Fuerst presented Zhang with the official plaque on behalf of the Rotary Club and the Greenbelt Labor Day Festival Committee. Then came the traditional proclamations – from the City of Greenbelt, Prince George’s County Council, Maryland General Assembly and the Prince George’s Public Schools Board of Education. Zhang also received the traditional tote bag of gift cards donated by Greenbelt-area businesses.

Eric Zhang was joined by family and friends for the reception honoring him and other Outstanding Citizens. From left, Zhang, daughter Angela Zhang (3), wife Grace Han, son Andrew Zhang (4); friend Huan Wu holding up his daughter Annabelle Wu (4) and friends Xu Wang and Tieren Gao holding up their son Yuanqi Gao (4) while their infant son Yuankun Gao sleeps in the stroller.

After the announcement, a large crowd that included city officials, former Outstanding Citizens and friends and family gathered in the council chambers for a reception honoring Zhang.

Background, Family

Coincidentally, Zhang was born the same year as the first Outstanding Citizen was named in Greenbelt, 1973 – and half a world away. He emigrated from China at the age of 17 and finished high school near New York City, then attended college in Boston and graduate school in upstate New York. He now works full-time as a computer engineer.

On a trip to California, Eric met his wife Grace Han, who earned a college degree in elementary education in China and had a job and many friends in her new home in the U.S. “She gave up her job, her family and her friends to go with me to Maryland,” he said. “I am grateful for that.”

The couple lived in rental units in the Washington, D.C., area for several years until Zhang went to a Greenbelt Homes, Inc. table at an event held outside Greenbelt and met Barbara Havekost, Dorothy Lauber and Cynthia Newcomer.

Havekost, a longtime resident, recalls that the lanky young man plied them with questions about GHI and the history of Greenbelt for nearly half an hour.

“His questions were so astute and insightful,” Havekost recalled. “He was so enthusiastic! When he left, Dorothy and I looked at each other and said, ‘Who is this guy?’ He blew us away.”

Steeped in History

Three aspects of Eric Zhang’s work documenting Greenbelt – his artistic vision, the depth of his historical research and the breadth of his coverage of the city – make it substantively more important than the ocean of photographs taken by most amateur photographers.

His feat is remarkable because he completed his marathon year while working full-time and ly.”

That was the approach taken by the FSA photographers and particularly Roy Stryker, who was in charge of the photography project during the New Deal years. Zhang was inspired by Stryker, who believed that an educated, sensitive photographer could produce images that would “mirror his understanding and compassion.”

Rexford Tugwell mentored Stryker at Columbia University and brought him into the Resettlement Administration which later became the FSA.

Zhang dug deeply into the FSA records and discovered the original “shooting scripts” that Stryker gave his photographers when they went out on assignment. The scripts were long lists of subjects to be photographed. The most relevant FSA shooting script for Zhang was one of the most famous – “Suggestions for a Documentary Photographic Study of the Small Town in America.”

“It starts from the street and goes on to buildings, stores, theatres, banks and then to people, transportation, church,” he said. “This was probably the checklist used by FSA photographers when they came to photograph Greenbelt in the 30s and 40s.”

Seventy-five years later as he photographed Greenbelt, Zhang consulted this list and tried to check off as many items as possible.

“I wanted to have a 2012 response to the FSA checklist,” he said. “I also looked at the FSA Greenbelt photos from the Library of Congress website many times. I wanted to have then-and-now photos.”

When I first saw Zhang photographing the Christmas tree lighting in December 2011, I thought he was a professional photographer working for an area newspaper. Others believed he was an enthusiastic amateur snapping random photos of the city and then sharing them generously with individuals and organizations. He was everywhere in town through an entire year. Only afterward did many of us realize the historic value of his gift to Greenbelt.

In the words of the nominating letter, “Eric Zhang gave us a fresh view of our city in the historic year of 2012 . . . he preserved for future generations a taste – no, a

“There is a fairly new field called visual anthropology which studies visual representations of various cultures,” he said. He became interested in the approach and began to think about “documenting things around himself systematical-
